Paige's Road to Recovery: How a PGx Test Changed Her Life

Paige struggled with anxiety and depression for some time and took a mental health medication for four months with no improvement in her symptoms. She was feeling discouraged and was ready to give up on her treatment. That's when her pharmacist at Tria Health suggested she take a PGx DNA test.

The results of the test showed that Paige had a genetic variation which impacted her metabolism of the medication. With this knowledge, her pharmacist was able to identify an option that avoided any drug-gene interactions. After making the switch, Paige was finally able to see an improvement in her anxiety and depression symptoms.

John's Triumph Over Unmanaged Blood Pressure

John was living with eight conditions, including diabetes and high blood pressure for many years. His blood pressure had been unmanaged, putting him at risk for serious cardiovascular complications.

John was referred to Tria Health, who provided him with a blood pressure cuff to help him monitor his blood pressure. The pharmacist consult and data points provided by the blood pressure cuff resulted in increasing the dose of his calcium channel blocker, helping to get his blood pressure to goal.
